Allied National Employees Assemble 622 Happy Kits for Children's Mercy Patients

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. – Allied National employees have demonstrated the power of community and generosity by donating enough supplies to create 622 Happy Kits for patients at Children's Mercy.

The Happy Kit initiative was launched in partnership with Children's Mercy to provide children and caregivers with activity-filled kits designed to bring comfort, distraction, and moments of joy during hospital visits. Employees rallied together to donate supplies including coloring books, crayons, markers, stickers, journals, books, and card games suitable for a variety of age groups.

Following the donation drive, employees participated in a volunteer packing event where they assembled all 622 kits, transforming individual donations into ready-to-use packages that will be distributed to patients and families at Children's Mercy.

"We are incredibly proud of the enthusiasm and generosity our employees showed in supporting this effort," said Lisa Hodson, Allied National's Chief Executive Officer. "The response exceeded our expectations and reflects Allied National's commitment to making a positive difference in the communities we serve. Every one of these 622 kits represents an opportunity to brighten a child's day and provide comfort during what can be a challenging time."

The kits include age-appropriate activities for young children, school-age children, teenagers, and caregivers. By providing engaging and creative materials, the kits help offer a welcome distraction and a sense of normalcy during hospital stays and appointments.

The success of the initiative highlights Allied National's culture of service and employee engagement. From contributing supplies to volunteering time during the assembly event, employees embraced the opportunity to support local families and create meaningful community impact.

"Our partnership with Children's Mercy allowed us to come together around a simple but powerful goal: bringing smiles to children who need them most," said Jared Anderson, Allied National's General Counsel and Human Resources Director. "Thanks to the generosity of our team, we were able to exceed that goal and deliver even more happiness than we originally imagined."
